90 | Giacomo Fenocchio $48
2012 Barolo Bussia This 2012 feels cool and lean, with austere tannins and leafy tobacco notes that give an earthy tone to the red berry and plum flavors. Its youthful energy and tight structure promise further complexity if left to age a few years more.

2010 Barolo Riserva Bussia Fenocchio's Riserva is tightly wound, with flavors of red plum and black licorice gripped by cool, iron-like tannins. It gains notes of tobacco, mint and savory herbs that linger on the fresh finish. This is the first vintage in which Claudio Fenocchio decided to follow the method of his grandfather and allow the wine to macerate for 90 days, two or three times longer than is typical. Fenocchio thinks this will give more effusive expression to the fruit, but for now the tannins hold that fruit in check and the wine needs at least five years in the cellar.

2012 Barolo Villero Claudio Fenocchio's Villero plot sits mid-slope, where the south-east-facing vines ripen the fruit into dark tones of plum and black cherry. He gives it a long maceration—close to 40 days—pulling out dense flavors and powerful tannins. Flavors of tar, black spice and menthol give the wine a ruggedly handsome personality, ready to match up with a seared strip steak.
